Art History 282B - Section 1:
Empathy and Embodiment in Contemporary Art
San José State University
Spring Semester 2009
Art Building 139 -- Thursday, 3:00-5:45 PM

Dr. Anthony Raynsford – Anthony.Raynsford@sjsu.edu -- Phone (408) 924-4796
Office: Art Building, Room 123
Office hours: Wednesday, 1:00-4:00 PM, or Tuesday, Thursday by appointment

* E-mail is generally the best method of contact during non-office hours.
* Please allow 48-hours for an e-mail response.
* Emergency: 911
* Campus Escort: 42222
* Individuals with disabilities may contact the Disability Resource Center (DRC), Administrative Building 110, 408/924-6000, for a variety of formats such as Braille, large print, sign interpreters, assistive listening devices, audio tape and accommodations for physical accessibility. The Learning Assistance Resource Center (LARC), Student Services Center 600, 924-2587, is available free to all students seeking help with writing.
* The $10 course fee for this Art History class supports course materials including website and image development.

GENERAL COURSE INFORMATION:
Topic and Scope of the Course: Over the last twenty years, theme of embodiment has remerged as one of the dominant motifs within contemporary art. Not only have questions of embodiment been framed in and through the materiality of things and artifacts, but also bodies have increasingly become objects of representation. The anthropomorphism of such artists as Louise Bourgeois and George Segal has found divergent echoes in the works of younger artists, such as Damien Hirst, Antony Gormley and Chris Ofili. Questions of embodiment in contemporary art have emerged under such themes as performance, identity, spectatorship, subjectivity, gender and the materiality of media. Artists have frequently invoked a return to the body in a double sense: that of embodied perceivers and that of embodied things (artworks). This mirroring of the body in the artwork parallels, in many cases, a version of empathetic response that has long been part of aesthetic theory. Therefore, the theme of embodiment is hardly new to contemporary art. Rather, it represents yet the latest pendulum swing in thinking of artworks either in terms of embodied experiential encounters or in terms disembodied visual codes (color fields, signs, cultural codes, etc.)

In exploring the theme of embodiment, this course will investigate contemporary art through the historical lenses of empathy theory, phenomenology and psychoanalysis. In reading contemporary art through these earlier discourses, one may begin to open up the contemporary aesthetics of embodiment at deeper levels, both intellectual and experiential. Since the theories themselves often emerged as explanations for quite different art objects, one task will be to place contemporary art in dialog with these theories. On an intellectual level the course will begin to investigate how contemporary works of art might be further explained or illuminated by these theories. On an experiential level, each participant will begin to test his or her own subjective reactions against the accounts of subjectivity and consciousness contained within the various theoretical models. Each of the three theoretical models will, in turn, be tested against the other two.

The course will begin with the origins of empathy theory in late 19th century Germany, when the field was still closely tied to philosophy and experimental psychology. This was a period marked by the emergence of the term, empathy (Einfühlung) in the writings of art psychologists, such as Robert Vischer. Art historians, such as Heinrich Wöllflin and August Schmarsow, for whom the body became both the medium and analog for the experiential encounter, then soon transformed empathy theory into an theoretical method. The theory of empathy held that aesthetic experience consisted in a series of correspondences or empathetic responses between the body of a hypothetical viewer and objects of art and architecture. While empathy theory had fallen out of favor by the mid-twentieth century, its models of understanding aesthetic experience have continued to enter into contemporary theoretical discourses in numerous ways, both conscious and unconscious. Already by the early twentieth century, however, such empathetic models of experience had come to be denounced by others as being sensational or “theatrical,” the opposite of a more serious intellectual or visual abstraction.

The course will next examine the theoretical discourses opened up by phenomenology in the mid-twentieth century, particularly through the writings of French philosopher, Maurice Merleau-Ponty. Merleau-Ponty, who became deeply engaged with the work of Cézanne, above all treated the physical body as the medium of perception and consciousness. While Merleau-Ponty reasserted the primacy of the body in visual sensation, he also postulated an anonymous visibility that preceded any distinction between the visual and the tactile, or even between subject and object.

In psychoanalysis the body once again entered into the core of theoretical discussions of experience, but in ways that complicated unified notions of bodies and subjects. While phenomenology tended to erase subject-object distinctions in aesthetic experience, psychoanalysis emphasized internal divisions that structured experiences of the body, especially through unconscious processes of splitting, abjection and identification. Jacques Lacan, partly influenced by Merleau-Ponty’s phenomenology, described a field of the gaze by which both bodies and vision were caught, as in a trap. In psychoanalytic readings of embodied experience, both viewers and bodies were caught in a web of identifications, in a social world of seeing and being seen. Recently, such psychoanalytic readings of the body have extended into issues of identity, gender, performance and abjection. Critics, such as Hal Foster, who may be counted as part of post-structuralist turn after 1960, especially drew on Lacanian psychoanalysis in their descriptions of spectatorial experience.

Finally, the course will approach the theme of embodiment, especially as it has been inflected by theories of power, identity and information technology. As artists and critics began to draw on the writings of Michel Foucault and Judith Butler, they placed an increasing emphasis on the body as a site, both of social control and of performative identity. As they began to respond to the technological revolutions of cybernetics and computing, they began to investigate the body as a hybridized, de-localized, even monstrous entity. As these discourses have brought the body and embodied experience back to the center of aesthetic and cultural theory, they have been based, as much as empathy theory was in the late 19th century, on assumptions about what the body is and how is experienced in relation to art. Even as questions of empathy seem have been de-centered or overturned in such post-humanist accounts, the apparent return return empathy within contemporary art today requires a closer look. What is, in fact, the experiential and/or aesthetic status of the body today? How does the phenomenon of embodiment register?

Purpose of Course: This course is an advanced graduate seminar, whose purpose is to provide a forum for collective investigation of a single topic and the presentation of individual research. The course will allow students to develop familiarity with a key body of theoretical texts, in order thereby to apply these texts to artistic practices or historical research. Students will be expected to read texts closely on two levels: 1) an intellectual level of content (i.e. what is the author arguing?) and 2) an experiential level of application (does the experience being described resonate with my own experience of objects?) Students will develop research projects related to the theme of the course as well as to present their work to the class. Students will also be expected to take an active role in class discussions, including introducing one of the readings during the semester.

The purpose of the course is to enable each student to attain the following goals:

- Understand and be able explain key texts in the theory of art;
- Apply textual knowledge analytically and intuitively to works of contemporary art;
- Learn to recognize basic themes and problems within the theme of embodiment, as these have emerged both historically and within the present;
- Learn to critically analyze theoretical texts and develop further implications;
- Learn to do research in the field of contemporary art;
- Be able to synthesize new points of view from a series of contrasting arguments;
- Apply textual knowledge to subjective realms of aesthetic experience; and
- Write clearly, persuasively, and critically while using or referencing a variety of theoretical models.

Note: As in any university course, ART 282B requires consistent student effort in order to achieve these learning goals. In other words, what you get out of the course will depend a great deal on what you put in.

Class Format: This course will be a seminar course, with heavy emphasis placed on student discussion, presentation and independent research. Each week, one or two students will be expected to lead the discussion on one or more of the readings. All students should come prepared to each class with questions and comments about particular passages in the readings, with a view towards connecting them to the larger issues of the course. The last session will be reserved for student presentations of final research projects. This final session may extend slightly longer than the usual seminar time.

Course Prerequisites: Prerequisite: ARTH 191A and admission to classified MFA status in art or instructor consent.

Required Texts: All required readings will be available for download at the websites listed below. In addition, key images from lecture will be made available on the Course Website.

- ARTH 72 On-Line Reader. Available on-line through King Library Electronic Course Reserves. At <www.sjlibrary.org/services/reserves/index.htm>; you will need a library password to access.
- ARTH 72 Course Website. Available at http://arth.sjsu.edu/.
- Additional resources will be made available on the SJSU Blackboard site for the course at http://sjsu6.blackboard.com/webct/. For more information, please contact IT Support Services: 924-2377, helpdesk@sjsu.edu.
- Other resources may be posted to the official blog for the course: http://art282b.blogspot.com/.
COURSE SCHEDULE:

Week 1 – January 22: Course Introduction

Week 2 – January 29: Empathetic Bodies / Symbolic Forms

Week 3 – February 5: Distanced Bodies / Visual Judgments

Week 4 – February 12: Kinesthetic Bodies / Architectural Space

Week 5 – February 19: Aesthetic Experience / Theoretical Ekphrasis

Week 6 – February 26: Empathy / Abstraction

Week 7 – March 5: Absent Bodies / The Anti-Theatrical Spectator

Week 8 – March 12: Visible Bodies / Phenomenological Vision

Paper proposal due Thursday 12 March

Week 9 – March 19: Body Identifications / Objects of the Gaze

p. 4

Week 10 – March 26: Spring Break

[NO CLASS]

Week 11 – April 2: Viewing Subjects / Disciplined Bodies

Week 12 – April 9: Sculpture, Presence and Site

Week 13 – April 16: Body Art / Corporeal Performances

Week 14 – April 23: Digital Bodies / Cyborgs

Week 15 –April 30: Presentations and / or Field Trip (to be announced)

Week 16 – May 7: Presentations

Final papers due in class May 7th!

COURSE REQUIREMENTS

General Requirements:
Attendance and active participation are essential to your success in this course as they represent your opportunity to apply what you have learned, to articulate your ideas clearly and effectively, to develop analytical and critical thinking about contemporary art and aesthetic theory. Students should be prepared to discuss all of the assigned readings for each class session. It is important to read the assigned material carefully and before each class session.

Presentations and Writing Assignments:
- Students will be expected to verbally present one of the assigned readings over the course of the semester;
- Students will be expected to give their reflections on the readings in the official blog for the course. Two of the blog entries (chosen by the student) will be graded;
- Grading criteria for all writing assignments is posted to the Blackboard site;
- Students will be expected to submit a final paper of 8 to 10 pages;
King Library Reference Librarians are an excellent resource for research information. See also the King Library Electronic "Articles & Databases" at <www.sjlibrary.org> and Course Website links to legitimate on-line resources; and

Relative weight of course requirements:

- Blog Entries 20%
- Paper Proposal 10%
- Final Presentation 10%
- Final Paper 40%
- Participation 20%

Policy on assignments and class attendance:

- Students are asked to turn off cell phones and to limit laptop use to note-taking while in class;
- All papers must be original to this class (no "recycling"), meet all requirements of the assignment, and provide proper in-text source citations for all sources used (including textbook and Internet sources) for credit. All final papers must be submitted with outline and draft versions for credit. Late papers will not be accepted.
- Please note: Except in cases of documented emergencies, incomplete grades are not given in this course.

University Policies:

A) Academic Integrity Statement

The University’s Academic Integrity Policy is available at http://www.sa.sjsu.edu/download/judicial_affairs/Academic_Integrity_Policy_S07-2.pdf. From the Office of Student Conduct and Ethical Development: "Your own commitment to learning, as evidenced by your enrollment at San José State University, and the University’s Academic Integrity Policy requires you to be honest in all your academic course work. Faculty members are required to report all infractions to the Office of Student Conduct and Ethical Development.” Further information can be found at <http://sa.sjsu.edu/student_conduct>.

B) Campus Policy in Compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act:

"If you need course adaptations or accommodations because of a disability, or if you need special arrangements in case the building must be evacuated, please make an appointment with me as soon as possible, or see me during office hours. Presidential Directive 97-03 requires that students with disabilities requesting accommodations must register with the Disability Resource Center (DRC, in Administrative Building 110, 408/924-6000) to establish a record of their disability."

C) Dropping and Adding:

Students are responsible for understanding the policies and procedures about add/drops, academic renewal, etc. Information on add/drops are available at http://info.sjsu.edu/web-dbgen/narr/soc-fall/rec-324.html. Information about late drop is available at http://www.sjsu.edu/sac/advising/latedrops/policy. Students should be aware of the current deadlines and penalties for adding and dropping classes.

Additional Note:

This syllabus is subject to change, in the event of unforeseen circumstances, or in the case that changes will significantly enhance the quality of the course. Students will collectively have the opportunity to shape the ways in which the course unfolds.